

Part I.

1. What is the current average amount of living space (in square meters) per urban area inhabitant? Per rural area inhabitant? Per inhabitant for the country as a whole? Include definition of "living space" as used in each country.

2. How many dwelling units or dwelling rooms deteriorate or age each year to the point of being uninhabitable? How many of these units or rooms are actually evacuated each year? Annual average for 1951-55, number for 1956, and expected annual average for 1957-60 are desired.

Part II.

1. What is the official estimate of the present situation concerning the following items:

- a. The number of dwelling units per 1,000 inhabitants.
- b. The number of dwelling rooms per 1,000 inhabitants (including definition of "dwelling room").
- c. The number of square meters of living space per inhabitant (include definition of "living space").
- d. The number of households without independent dwelling units or the average number of households per dwelling unit.
- e. The number of individuals or households now occupying substandard dwelling units and the number of substandard dwelling units now in use (include definition of "substandard").

2. What is the present official estimate on the following:

- a. The number of dwelling units, dwelling rooms, or square meters of living space a year needed to maintain the present level of housing conditions.
- b. The average number of dwelling units, dwelling rooms or square meters of living space per 1,000 inhabitants considered to be the goal to work toward to improve housing conditions by 1960, 1965, 1970?

3. What is the average size of dwelling units (in dwelling rooms or square meters of living space) built during 1950-55, during 1956, planned for 1957-60?

4. How many dwelling units or dwelling rooms are lost or gained each year as a result of conversions to and from non-residential uses. The annual average for 1951-55, the number for 1956, and the expected annual average for 1957-60 are desired.

5. Which regions or cities currently have the most serious housing shortages? Why?